FIRM VICTORY

Correctional Deputy's Termination Upheld Due To Misconduct And Dishonesty.

LCW Partner Jennifer Rosner and Associate Attorneys James Oldendorph and Brian Dierzé successfully represented a county in a correctional deputy's disciplinary appeal.

In June 2019, a correctional deputy with a sheriff's department (Department) searched a prison inmate's cell after the inmate was disrespectful towards the deputy. During the search, the inmate's commissary and food items were damaged, with some of his items were strewn outside of the cell. The correctional deputy did not prepare a cell search log or activity report.

After the cell search, the correctional deputy allegedly announced over the prison loudspeaker that dayroom privileges – a set number of hours when inmates are allowed to socialize, take a shower, and make telephone calls – were suspended for the entire cellblock. According to the inmate, the correctional deputy announced that the inmate whose cell was searched was to blame for the suspension of dayroom privileges, which caused other inmates to attack the inmate.

In responding to the attack, the correctional deputy handcuffed only the attacked inmate. The correctional deputy also did not give the involved inmates Miranda Warnings or interview them. The deputy also closed the incident file without a report, despite being assigned to do so.

The injured inmate then submitted a grievance and a letter to the grand jury. The inmate alleged the correctional deputy orchestrated an attack on him and destroyed his personal property during the cell search. A subsequent investigation found that the correctional deputy violated several of the Department's General Orders, including dishonestly stating that he Mirandized inmates, interviewed inmates, and prepared a written report following the incident. The deputy told the investigator that he merely forgot to submit the written report, and thereafter submitted a report that was poorly written and appeared to be a "cut and paste" job. Based on the investigation findings, the correctional deputy was terminated.

The correctional deputy appealed his termination, alleging that he searched the inmate's cell for potential contraband, such as drugs or alcohol, given the inmate's disrespectful behavior. The hearing officer found, however, that the weight of the evidence showed that the correctional deputy searched the inmate's cell strictly in response to the inmate's disrespectful conduct. The hearing officer cited the correctional deputy's hearing testimony that there was no evidence that the inmate was under the influence of drugs or alcohol before or after the cell search. The hearing officer further found that the search was not conducted properly or professionally given the destruction of the inmate's property and the correctional deputy's failure to prepare a cell search log or activity report documenting the search. The hearing officer determined that the correctional deputy's conduct violated the Department's General Orders and provisions of the applicable memorandum of understanding (MOU) regarding incompetence, inefficiency, negligence, and conduct unbecoming of a custodial deputy.

The correctional deputy further alleged that evidence did not show that he orchestrated the assault and battery of the inmate. The hearing officer agreed, and found that there was conflicting evidence regarding whether the correctional deputy identified the inmate over the cellblock loudspeaker. However, the hearing officer found that the deputy's failure to handcuff all inmates involved in the battery violated the Department's General Orders and MOU provisions.

Lastly, the hearing officer found that the correctional deputy failed to properly investigate the assault, including failing to Mirandize or interview the inmates involved; failed to prepare an incident report; and was dishonest regarding his investigation of the incident. The hearing officer noted that credibility and honesty are essential traits of a custodial deputy, and that breach of trust is sufficient to terminate the employment of even a long-term deputy with no record of prior discipline.

NOTE:

This case is another in a long line of cases that finds that termination is an appropriate penalty for peace officer and/or custodial deputy dishonesty due to the position of trust they hold with the communities they serve.

Union's Request For "Clarification" Of Arbitration Award Denied.

LCW Partner Adrianna Guzman and Associate Attorney Jolina Abrena successfully represented a county in opposing a union's request for clarification of an arbitration award involving a deputy sheriff. The union's request came more than two years after arbitration.

In the original arbitration, a deputy sheriff grieved the removal of his training duties while assigned to a field training officer (FTO) position. The memorandum of understanding (MOU) provided that an FTO receives bonus pay only when assigned training duties. In July 2018, the original arbitration decision found that the department violated the MOU by not providing the deputy with training duties. The arbitrator ordered that the deputy be reinstated as an FTO with training duties and awarded him the bonus pay he would have received had the department not removed those duties. After the arbitrator issued his arbitration decision and award, the union requested that the arbitrator retain jurisdiction until November 21, 2018. Since the union did not seek to re-open the arbitration proceedings, the decision became final and binding on November 22, 2018.

In April 2021, approximately 29 months after the arbitration decision became final and binding, the union requested that the arbitrator clarify the arbitration award. Specifically, the union alleged that the deputy was entitled to "Senior FTO" bonus pay – a higher level of bonus pay – from the time his training duties were removed until the department reinstated those duties in compliance with the arbitration award in 2018. The union argued that its request for clarification did not represent a "reopening" of the prior arbitration because the request did not require consideration of additional testimony or documentation.

The department opposed the union's request for clarification on the grounds that the union waited more than two years after the original decision became final and binding to make its request. The department further noted that the union had the opportunity to submit an application to correct the arbitration decision and award under Code of Civil Procedure Section 1284, or to file a petition to correct the arbitration decision and award pursuant to Section 1285.8 and 1288, but failed to do either. The arbitrator agreed, noting that he had neither the authority nor the jurisdiction to clarify the award. Accordingly, the arbitrator denied the union's request for clarification.

NOTE:

LCW was able to prove that the union was not simply seeking a "clarification" of the arbitration award, but was trying to reopen or correct an arbitration decision and award without a timely motion.

COURT SECURITY SERVICES

Sheriff's Office Could Not Rely On MOU Terms For Court Security Services Because They Failed To Comply With The Law.

In July 2015, the Alameda County Superior Court (ACSC), the County of Alameda (County), and the Alameda County Sheriff's Office (Sheriff's Office) entered into a memorandum of understanding (MOU). The MOU covered a three-year period from 2014 to 2017, and confirmed that the County and Sheriff's Office would provide court security services to ACSC. The MOU stated the terms of the court security services were in Exhibits C-1 and C-3 of the MOU. Exhibit C-1 described specific and detailed staffing needs for each ACSC location and contained charts identifying precisely how many Sheriff's Office employees in each classification were required at each court location, amounting to a minimum of 129 court security personnel. Exhibit C-3 stated the Sheriff's Office was not required to provide security services in excess of any funding ultimately issued by the State of California (State) to the County for those services. The Sheriff's Office reserved the right in Exhibit C-3 to reduce the number of personnel and scope of security services if the State failed to provide sufficient funds.

In 2016, the Sheriff's Office submitted a request to the State for over $3 million in additional funding for court security services at one of ACSC's court locations. In 2017, the State responded by granting the Sheriff's Office an additional $500,000 per year for court security services. Thereafter, the Sheriff's Office informed ACSC that court security staffing would be reduced from 129 to 114 personnel due to the shortfall in funding from the State. The Sheriff's Office and the County also recommended that ACSC alter court operations so that ACSC would need fewer security personnel.

In October 2019, ACSC filed a petition for a writ of mandate and complaint for declaratory relief against the County and Sheriff's Office, alleging that the County had a duty to provide and pay for 129 court security personnel even if the State's funding did not cover the cost of doing so until the parties entered into a new MOU. The County and Sheriff's Office alleged that Exhibit C-3 of the MOU permitted the Sheriff's Office to reduce staffing depending on the funding provided by the State.

The trial court denied ACSC's writ petition and entered judgment for the County and Sheriff's Office, finding that there was nothing in Exhibit C-3 to suggest that the parties intended for the Sheriff's Office to be obligated to provide a minimum of 129 security personnel if the funding provided by the State was not sufficient. ACSC appealed, arguing that the County and Sheriff's Office were bound to provide the level of court security services set forth in Exhibit C-1 because Exhibit C-3 did not contain a "mutually agreed upon" list of the court security services that the Sheriff's Office was obligated to provide to ACSC. The Court of Appeal agreed and reversed the trial court's decision.

The Court of Appeal acknowledged that superior courts must "contract, subject to available funding, with a sheriff or martial, for the necessary level of law enforcement services in the courts." The Court then examined Government Code Section 69926, which requires a court security MOU to specify "an agreed-upon level of court security services" in order to remain in effect after the MOU expired and until the parties agree on a new MOU. The Court of Appeal held that because Exhibit C-3 did not identify any "agreed upon level of court security services," and instead allowed the Sheriff's Office to unilaterally reduce services to whatever amount could be supported by the funding provided to the State, it did not comply with Section 69926. By contrast, Exhibit C-1 expressly identified a minimum level of court security services of 129 personnel.

The County argued that Exhibit C-3 was not required to specify an agreed upon level of court security services because that information was provided elsewhere in the MOU, and specifically in Exhibit C-1. The Court of Appeal disagreed, holding that Section 69926 states that MOU provisions will only remain in effect after the MOU expires if they specify an agreed-upon level of court security services, which Exhibit C-3 did not do. The Court stated that its holding aligned with public policy of ensuring that courts have adequate and dependable security services.

The Court of Appeal reversed the judgment for the County and Sheriff's Office and remanded the matter back to the trial court for further proceedings regarding the affirmative defenses raised by the County and the Sheriff's Office.

Superior Court of Alameda County v. County of Alameda, 65 Cal. App.5th 838 (2021).

NOTE:

The Court of Appeal noted that the law regarding the security services a county or sheriff's department provides to the courts is explicit as to what happens after the MOU expires. Any MOU provision contrary to the law was unenforceable after the MOU expired.

DUE PROCESS

Final Decision Maker's Involvement Excused Employee From Exhausting His Administrative Appeal.

Jason Briley worked for the City of West Covina as a deputy fire marshal. As deputy fire marshal, Briley oversaw the operations of the Fire Prevention Bureau, which included checking building code plans and existing buildings for Fire Code compliance and conducting fire investigations. For part of his employment, the assistant fire chief, Larry Whithorn, supervised Briley.

In June 2014, Briley complained to the City that several City officials, including Whithorn and the city manager, had: failed to address his reports of Fire Code violations; and allowed a building permit to be issued before the building plans had passed fire inspection. The City hired a private firm to investigate Briley's allegations.

After making his initial complaint, Briley also complained that Whithorn and others had retaliated against him by cancelling his scheduled overtime, moving him to a smaller office, and changing his take-home vehicle. These new allegations were included in the pending investigation.

During this time, Briley also filed grievances raising many of the same claims and alleging that Whithorn had retaliated by giving him a poor performance review. In January 2015, the investigation firm concluded that Briley's allegations were largely unfounded. The then-Assistant City Manager Freeland received the report and adopted the firm's findings. As a result of this investigation, Whithorn's relationship with Briley became "strained."

While this investigation was still pending, Whithorn and the city manager also informed the City of multiple complaints against Briley involving allegations of misconduct and unprofessional behavior. Specifically, Briley was alleged to have: 1) addressed a fire captain in an unprofessional manner and used profanity in addressing a retail worker when responding to a fire alarm at a store; 2) improperly obtained a prospective City employee's personnel form; and 3) used profanity in addressing individuals at a CrossFit gym. The City retained another firm to investigate the allegations against Briley. The investigation ultimately determined that Briley had exhibited a pattern of unbecoming conduct, unprofessional behavior, and incompetence, and that Briley had been untruthful. By this time, Whithorn had been promoted to fire chief.

As fire chief, Whithorn issued Briley a notice of intent to terminate. After a pre-termination meeting, another city official decided to uphold Briley's termination and issued him a notice of termination. Through his counsel, Briley protested his termination and asserted it was "clearly further retaliation against him."

In December 2015, Briley initiated an administrative appeal of his discipline to the City's HR Commission. The City's rules provide that the HR Commission must grant the employee an evidentiary hearing and deliver its recommendations to relevant City officials. For Briley's appeal, the ultimate decisionmakers following the HR Commission's review would have been Whithorn and Freeland. Around this time, Freeland, who had adopted the investigation firm's findings that Briley's retaliation claims were largely unfounded, had been promoted to city manager.

While the HR Commission scheduled Briley's appeal, Briley's counsel notified the commission that Briley would not proceed because the appeal hearing would be futile for several reasons, including that Freeland and Whithorn were biased against him. Briley then initiated a civil lawsuit against the City alleging whistleblower retaliation under Labor Code Section 1102.5. The City argued that Briley could not pursue his claims because he failed to exhaust his administrative remedies, but the trial court disagreed. Instead, the court concluded that Briley was excused from pursuing an appeal to the HR Commission. The matter proceeded to trial, and the jury awarded Briley $4 million dollars, including $3.5 million in noneconomic damages. The City appealed.

On appeal, the City claimed, among other arguments, that the trial court: erred in concluding Briley was not required to exhaust his administrative remedies; and abused its discretion in failing to reduce the jury's excessive award for non-economic damages.

The Court of Appeal found for Briley on the failure to exhaust remedies defense. The Court relied solely on Whithorn's involvement in the underlying dispute and his expected role in deciding Briley's appeal. Although the Court found that the standard for impartiality in an administrative hearing was lower than in judicial proceedings, the Court determined that Whithorn's involvement in the administrative appeal violated due process. Therefore, Briley was excused from proceeding with his administrative appeal. The court reasoned that due process entitles a person seeking an evidentiary administrative hearing appeal to "a reasonably impartial, noninvolved reviewer." Whithorn's role presented an "unacceptable risk" of bias that excused Briley from exhausting this remedy, given both: Whithorn's personal involvement in the same controversies at issue in the administrative appeal; and the significant animosity between Whithorn and Briley that resulted from Briley's attacks on Whithorn's integrity. The Court was careful to emphasize that it was not making any blanket finding about bias in administrative hearing decision makers. Instead, the Court held "only that as a matter of due process, an official whose prior dealings with the employee have created substantial animosity and whose own conduct and character are central to the proceeding may not serve as a decisionmaker."

The court concluded that the $3.5 million noneconomic damages award was so excessive that it may have resulted from the jury's passion or prejudice. At trial, Briley claimed that his termination had caused him "distress" and that the ordeal was "tough" because: his livelihood was taken away; and he had dedicated eight years to the City. He also stated his termination was "upsetting", and that he had "issues with his sleep" because of financial uncertainty. There was no evidence, however, that any of the problems Briley described were particularly severe. Thus, the court concluded that the jury's total award of $3.5 million in noneconomic damages was "shockingly disproportionate to the evidence of Briley's harm and cannot stand." The court remanded the case for a new trial on Briley's noneconomic damages.

Briley v. City of W. Covina, 66 Cal.App.5th 119 (2021).

DISCRIMINATION

The Time To File A Failure-To-Promote Claim Begins When The Employee Knows Or Should Know Of The Decision To Promote Another.

Pamela Pollock is a customer service representative at Tri-Modal Distribution Services, Inc. (Tri-Modal), a freight shipping company. In 2014, Tri-Modal's executive vice-president, Michael Kelso, initiated a dating relationship with Pollock. While Kelso wanted the relationship to become sexual, Pollock did not, so she ended the relationship in 2016. Subsequently, Pollock alleged that Tri-Modal and Kelso denied her a series of promotions, even though she was the most qualified candidate, and that her refusal to have sex with Kelso was the reason.

On April 18, 2018, Pollock filed an administrative complaint with California's Department of Fair Employment and Housing (DFEH) alleging quid pro quo sexual harassment in violation of the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA). In her DFEH complaint, Pollock challenged the promotion of Leticia Gonzalez, among others. As relevant to this appeal, Tri-Modal offered, and Gonzalez accepted, a promotion in March 2017 and the promotion took effect on May 1, 2017. There was no evidence as to whether or when Tri-Modal notified Pollock that she did not receive the promotion. There was also no evidence that Pollock knew or had reason to know that Gonzalez was offered the promotion and accepted it in March 2017.

At the time Pollock filed her DFEH complaint, the FEHA required employees seeking relief to file an administrative complaint with the DFEH within one year "from the date upon which the alleged unlawful practice . . . occurred." Pollock argued her failure to be promoted occurred on the May 1, 2017 date that Gonzalez began her promotion, so her April 2018 administrative complaint was timely. Tri-Modal and Kelso argued, however, that its failure to promote Pollock "occurred" in March 2017 when Gonzalez accepted promotion, so Pollock filed her complaint too late.

The trial court concluded that the failure to promote occurred in March 2017 when Gonzalez was offered and accepted the promotion. Thus, the trial court found that Pollock's claim was time-barred, and the Court of Appeal agreed. The Court of Appeal then awarded costs on appeal to all of the defendants. However, the court did not address whether Pollock's underlying claim was "frivolous, unreasonable, or groundless when brought" or that she "continued to litigate after it clearly became so." After Pollock petitioned for a rehearing on the award of costs and the Court of Appeal denied her petition, the California Supreme Court granted review.

The California Supreme Court held that for a FEHA failure to promote claim, the statute of limitations to file a DFEH complaint begins to run when an employee knows or reasonably should know of the employer's refusal to promote the employee. Although there was no evidence in this case when Pollock knew of Gonzalez's promotion, Pollock's legal papers in opposition to Kelso's motion for summary judgment did not dispute that Gonzalez was offered and accepted the promotion in March 2017.

In addition, the Court held that the FEHA's directive that a prevailing FEHA defendant "shall not be awarded fees and costs unless the court finds the action was frivolous, unreasonable, or groundless when brought, or the plaintiff continued to litigation after it clearly became so" also applies to an award of costs on appeal. The Court concluded the Court of Appeal erred in awarding costs on appeal to Tri-Modal and Kelso without first finding whether Pollock's underlying claim was objectively groundless.

Pollock v. Tri-Modal Distribution Servs., Inc., 2021 WL 3137429 (Cal. July 26, 2021).

NOTE:

At the time of the alleged misconduct here, the FEHA provided that an administrative complaint needed to be filed with the DFEH within one year. The California Legislature expanded that time to three years. This case also demonstrates how important it is to carefully respond to alleged facts in a summary judgement motion.

WAGE AND HOUR

California Law Allows The "Rate-In-Effect" Method To Calculate The Regular Rate Of Pay.

In 2011, a group of employees from several Buffalo Wild Wings franchises sued the owners of their restaurants for violations of California wage and hour law on behalf of themselves and others. The employees were employed in various capacities, including server, bartender, certified trainer, manager-in-training, and shift lead.

In 2014, the trial court partially granted the employees' motion for class certification and certified multiple classes and subclasses. One such subclass, the dual rate overtime subclass, alleged the owners paid certain employees different rates of pay for performing the same type of work during the same pay period and, as a result, underpaid certain employees for overtime work. Specifically, these employees asserted that the owners violated Labor Code Sections 510 and 1194 by using the "rate-in-effect method" instead of the "weighted average method" for calculating the regular rates of pay for dual rate employees.

Labor Code Section 510 requires that employees be compensated at a rate of no less than 1.5 times the employee's regular rate of pay for all work in excess of eight hours in one workday and 40 hours in any one workweek. When an employee works at two different pay rates rather than a fixed rate during a single workweek, employers must calculate the regular rate of pay based on both rates. For these dual rate employees, two methods for calculating the regular rate of pay have been developed: the weighted average method and the rate-in-effect method.

The weighted average method adds all hours worked in the week and divides that number into the total compensation for the week. Under the rate-in-effect method, the regular rate of pay is the hourly rate in effect at the time the overtime hours begin. The rate-in-effect method has the added benefit of being a simpler method for computing overtime pay. However, California's Division of Labor Standards Enforcement (DLSE) Manual has endorsed the weighted average method.

While the trial court initially certified multiple classes and subclasses, it ultimately decertified all classes but the dual rate overtime subclass. In a separate trial related to another portion of employees' claims, the trial court ruled in favor of the owners, finding that: 1) the employees failed to exhaust the necessary administrative remedies; 2) their dual rate claim was barred by the statute of limitations; 3) they failed to prove that owners' use of a rate-in-effect method to calculate overtime in dual rate workweeks violated any labor law; and 4) even if the owners did violate the law by using the rate-in-effect method to calculate overtime, the impact on the employees was negligible. Based on the trial court's ruling, the owners moved to decertify the dual rate overtime subclass, and the trial court granted the motion. The parties also stipulated to dismiss the employees' other claims under the Private Attorney's General Act (PAGA) so that only the individual claims remained. The employees appealed.

On appeal, the appellate court noted that the trial court gave a single reason for decertification of the dual rate overtime subclass: the employees, who had proposed the separate trial in the first place, were bound by the trial court's finding that the owners did not violate any law by using the rate-in-effect method of calculating the overtime rate. The appellate court agreed, finding that although the DLSE Manual has endorsed the weighted average method, the statements in the DLSE Manual are not binding. Further, the court noted that while a California Supreme Court case cited the weighted average method, the issues in that case were different. In summary, California law did not make the weighted average method the exclusive method for calculating the regular rate of pay for dual rate employees.

In addition, the court noted that by using the rate-in-effect method for calculating the regular rate of pay, the owners conferred a net benefit on dual rate employees. For example, the employees' expert testified that one of the dual rate employees worked seven dual rate periods. Of those seven periods, one resulted in the employee receiving 98 cents less overtime pay than he would have received using the weighted average method, and six periods resulted in a total of $34.31 more overtime pay. Thus, the employee received $33.33 more overtime pay due to the owners' use of the rate-in-effect method. The employees' expert also determined that in total, the employees were paid $2,065.74 more because the owners had used the rate-in-effect method instead of the weighted average method. Thus, the court concluded that imposing penalties of any amount against the owners would be unjust.

Accordingly, the court affirmed the trial court's decision and determined that the owners did not violate California employment law.

Levanoff v. Dragas, 65 Cal. App. 5th 1079 (2021).

NOTE:

This case interpreted California wage and hour law, which generally applies to private employers. The federal law – the Fair Labor Standards Act ("FLSA") – generally applies to public agencies. Under the FLSA, when an employee has more than one rate of pay, the regular rate of pay is "the weighted average of such rates." However, the FLSA allows the rate-in-effect method if the overtime compensation was paid pursuant to an agreement or understanding arrived at between the employer and the employee in advance of performance of the work.

2 Day Internal Affairs Investigation Seminar

October 19, 2021 | 9:00am - 4:00pm

AND

October 20, 2021 | 9:00am - 4:00pm

The Internal Affairs investigation is a key element in whether an agency will be successful in imposing discipline. What do decision makers, hearing lawyers and courts look for in an IA report? This two-day course will unlock the difference between an IA that supports discipline versus those that undermine it.

This POST-approved course provides a complete guide to conducting a fair and thorough internal affairs investigation that will create a defensible disciplinary action in the event of sustained findings. You will gain an understanding of the impact that good decision-making and strategy have on the agency's success in defending IAs and winning appeals.

This 2-day seminar will encompass legal aspects of a properly conducted IA Seminar, including topics such as:

- Overview of the Peace Officers' Bill of Rights (POBR) and consequences of violations for your agency
- Best practices in initiating and organizing the IA investigation
- How to obtain documents and other evidence
- Interview techniques and transcript recommendations, plus pitfalls to avoid
- Identifying common mistakes during IA investigations and solutions
- Current and emerging legal trends in public safety allegations and discipline

Partner Peter Brown and Associate Alex Volberding penned "Employer Comms Key To New Calif. COVID Rules Compliance" for the June 29 issue of Law360, which highlights the collaboration needed between employers and employees to increase the workforce vaccination rate and avoid negative operational impacts and costs associated with work-related COVID-19 exposure.

Senior Counsel David Urban penned the article "Give Me a $#@%—SCOTUS Bolsters First Amendment in Cheerleader Case," which was published in the July 9 issue of Bloomberg Law. The piece explores the U.S. Supreme Court's decision regarding a public school that punished a cheerleader for a vulgar social media post and what the decision means for public educators.

Associate Ronnie Arenas appeared on Telemundo June 16, 2021 to discuss CalOSHA and the pending decision regarding masks in the workplace.

Managing Partner Shelline Bennett penned the piece "Bringing back decorum and civility in the public sector," which was published in the June 1, 2021 edition of Western City Magazine. The article provides much-needed tips that elected officials and senior city management can implement to help preserve civility and set high standards for employees, elected officials, and the cities with which they work.

In the 2nd Quarter 2021 issue of Workspan, Associate and Affordable Care Act (ACA) expert Stephanie Lowe shared her thoughts on how the Supreme Court might rule on a case regarding the ACA's individual mandate. The article explores whether the individual mandate can be severed from the ACA as well as whether the mandate and the ACA as a whole are constitutional.
